Why Richmond Should Annex Manchester

NO. 5.
The recently annexed territory embraced very little land, considering our rapid growth, purchasable for profitable investment for homes for wage-earners.

We are reliably informed that no desirable land of any consequence within the present city limits can be purchased sufficiently low to justify the erection of comfortable homes renting for from $12 to $16 per month, the amount the average wage-earner should be called upon to pay.

Manchester possesses a great quantity of conveniently and naturally well drained land, desirable and purchasable for such development, with ample street car conveniences, splendid water, in easy access to the manufacturing plants in Manchester, and with good car and bridge facilities over the river to those in Richmond.

It is claimed by political economists that a man should not pay more than one-fourth of his wages for rent; if he does he cannot properly care for a family; if he undertakes to do so, his family, the grocer, the butcher or shoe man must suffer. The average salary of the wage-earner, liberally estimated, does not exceed $65 per month. On this basis he should not pay over $16 per month. We submit there cannot be found in Richmond fifteen homes with improved sanitary conditions for this price. Such homes are just as essential to the mechanic as to the banker, merchant or manufacturer. Investigation among real estate agents will confirm this situation.

Unless Richmond provides such territory the future growth of her industries would be seriously affected, and it will be a hopeless task to induce additional large manufacturing plants to locate, as the housing of employees is the prime element considered by industrial investors. If rents are not reasonable the employer of labor must pay more than his competitor operating in a city where rents are reasonable, otherwise the employe will quit, leaving for another city, where his wages will be the same and his rent would be cheaper. The entire South-to-day is in want of skilled labor for constantly increasing operations.

The rapid increase in value of residential real estate in Richmond for the past ten years cannot hold up or continue to enhance unless our principal source of wealth, which is manufacturing and the agencies distributing their product, are provided with adequate economical conditions. Therefore we must give our serious consideration to development along this line.
